One example involves underwater hunting. It is well known that many fish, including alligators, feed on other fish at night. Fish swimming near the surface of the water in search of a mate are particularly vulnerable to predation. A diver can sneak up on such a fish and capture it by suddenly rising from the water. It is advantageous for the diver to have a light source that can be easily and safely turned on in order to attract the fish. Another example of a situation requiring low level light involves the operation of certain robotics. Robots are well-known for their ability to carry out functions over a vast number of tasks. Typically, this ability is accomplished by the use of relatively complex robotic arms and sub-assemblies.

The speed and efficiency of performing a given task depends upon the accuracy of movement of each sub-assembly. For example, if the arm and sub-assemblies are slow to react to an environmental change, the efficiency of the overall system may be significantly less than it would be if they were more responsive. A robot capable of carrying out a wide variety of tasks must be capable of movement in all directions.

Typically, this requires the robot to have a relatively large track (wheel or ring) to which a sub-assembly is attached. The sub-assembly moves on this track as a function of the position of the track. When the robot moves too rapidly, the track may overheat, or other problems can arise. In
