The August 4, 2013 Cairo "Egyptian Revolution" In the summer of 2011, millions of Egyptians flooded the streets of Cairo and, eventually, across the country, to protest against the tyrannical rule of their government. The reason for this uprising was the enactment of a long-awaited law that imposed Islamic Sharia law on all Muslim citizens. This government-imposed law, described as "The Correct Way to Govern," went so far as to outlaw alcohol, pork, and all media that was not broadcast on government television. However, this fear and violation of human rights by the Morsi government eventually galvanized the Egyptian population and they organized a successful revolution against the government. As might be expected, the American government that is a firm and reliable ally of our Egyptian government didn't see it that way. In the midst of all this insanity, suddenly the U.S. media began de-emphasizing the event in Egypt. Certainly, if you listened to the president, the media, or just read the news, you would think this event was a minor event, just like the same media seemed to ignore, after
