Q: Convert SQL Server variable to a readable value that a user can see I currently have a SQL Server database that I want to show users of the database. I have a variable that acts like a book (author, title, price,...). This variable is updated from time to time. I was thinking of having this variable as a column in the database. But then, I didn't know how to make this value clear to the users. So, I was thinking if I could make this value as a multiline string. I could have this string always in a readable way. As far as I know, you can create a table with defined text but I want to know if there is a better approach and if this is even possible. A: Since you are only using a string table - you could make this a String table with a column for each of your book titles. By using an index on the book title column you could pick the title you want to display. Alternatively, it might be better to have a little query or a stored procedure that returns the data you want displayed. If you do have a column for book titles, you might also want to look at VARCHAR(MAX) rather than a simple varchar column. This might be a better option because if you make the string column too big, it will return more rows, which is slower, and it will take more space if you are using compressed row format (which I would expect from a bookshelf full of books). SQL Server doesn't really have a built in string builder, but a row based string builder is simple to implement. It would look something like this: `SELECT TOP (1) title1 FROM book_titles_table bt ORDER BY book_titles_table.book_title ASC` When a user wants to see a book, they would send the book title back to the server, and the above query would find it. The server would

At the head of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security's Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) is a scientist who helped build the World Wide Web and created the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) in the 1970s, the Wall Street Journal reported. The U.S. Cyber Command, which oversees CISA, named Kevin Mandia the top cybersecurity official last year, The Journal reported. But he had only been on the job for a few months when the Senate Intelligence Committee, which vets federal nominees, rejected his nomination in February because it found he'd previously played a role in high-profile Internet privacy cases against AT&T and Verizon. Mandia, a professor at Rutgers University, chaired a government committee that in December 2010 recommended that the government oversee certain Internet functions to protect privacy. The committee said the job should fall under DHS because the U.S. government is most responsible for protecting the government's own data. But lawmakers from both sides of the aisle said in February that they doubted Mandia's nomination should have been rejected because of his previous work. Mandia could not be reached for comment. "The whole purpose of the nomination was that there was a nominee with enough credibility to hold up to scrutiny," Joseph 3da54e8ca3
