I hope it will help you. A: There are numerous software out there for doing this on Windows. Most of the tools though are for Windows 7 or newer versions. If you're comfortable with using the Command Prompt or PowerShell this should work fine. This page has a list of a few: a tool like Simple WPS Sniffer sourceforge's sourceforge project. If you want a GUI tool, you have to find a P2P program that works with Windows 7. Some you might find in this thread on WinAmp. Angels with Developers - yarapavan ===== jedschmidt I love this, but thought I would point out the way media companies use these kind of articles to try to justify their existence: [ deve...]( ~~~ pjmlp It is probably the typical modern PR copy, hidden inside an "interview" article. As far as I remember, this particular one is older than you are. ~~~ Rariel Stuff like this is great because a lot of startups do not post about their startup on their blog - it's just too much work. This way you get some stats about the startups across the web. It's just interesting to know. ----- simead Why does A+ need to have anonymous voting? In two previous posts on this topic, I discussed the debate on whether the world is in a "new cold" or an old "inverse" glaciation [Nature 466, 1014 (2010); Nature 467, 103 (2010)]. I concluded that the new cold interlude is a natural phenomenon that is not even inconsistent with a plausible anthropogenic climate change scenario. However, it may well be that there are many more warmer interludes that have been missed due to systematic biases that I described in detail in the previous posts. Global temperature reconstruction for the last 100,000 years as published in Figure 4 from the EUSST2 dataset. Numbers given in the figure show the 21st century
