Oxygen breathing improves Ia inhibition in paraplegics. To determine whether a prolonged interval between injury and treatment is advantageous, we studied 17 spinal cord injured subjects (10 paraplegics and 7 quadriplegics). Subjects were tested under a number of conditions. After 3 months of unrestricted activity and activity monitored with a heart rate monitor (HRM), they were tested while breathing 20% oxygen at 1 ATA. All subjects were tested at rest and during graded exercise on a bicycle ergometer. Subjects were retested after 6 weeks of non-use. At rest, performance on the Ia inhibition tasks was markedly improved after breathing oxygen; most subjects improved by 10% or more on the negative A wave (NAA) task, and some improved on the positive A wave (PA) task. After 6 weeks of non-use, subjects returned to
