What's new in Riverbit System Optimizer 3.0 An optimization run takes only 5 minutes Manual registry and file optimization Keyfinder Added different search results for the rebuild-search function Fixed a bug with mail (.MDB) files Small improvements The purpose of this video is to show you how to check, view, and clear.dat file records in Windows. These files can quickly become corrupt when certain steps are taken in the Windows OS, especially in Windows 98 systems. Generally.dat files are displayed as a long string of text in the Windows registry. And because it's not properly organized, it can be difficult to determine what's wrong. Filenames such as AOL, Agent2, or the programs themselves can all present in these files. Here's how you can locate and delete these files. After upgrading from Window ME to Windows XP, my network card drivers would not install in windows. After many attempts and hours of searching, I found a solution through a message sent to an anonymous person. "I had the same problem but i fixed it with a boot-up cd or any disk that can repair your system". Most Windows hosts and their users have approximately 2 GB of free hard disk space on the C: drive and may not be aware of some of the ways that disk space can be reclaimed. With some hosts, Windows automatically reclaims some disk space for its own uses, and other hosts may need to have the administrator reclaim disk space manually. It is possible to have Windows create an oversized system drive (as much as 1.5 GB or so) but it is a potential security risk and many hosts simply don't do this. Some ways to reclaim disk space that you are not aware of exist. In the following sections, we'll discuss four ways that disk space may be reclaimed. Disk Isolation NTFS is a simple partitioning scheme where each partition has a separate drive letter. Your host may have had a partition called C: or perhaps your host had just one partition with the C: drive and the rest of the space used as a single directory. In all of these cases, disk space can be freed up on the drive by simply making the partition smaller. Windows Explorer can do this for you, and the following steps are pretty easy. In the Start Search window that runs from the taskbar, type volume, and click the Disk Cleanup. A Disk Cleanup tool window may open. Click the Clean up System Files button
