What's New in the Accounts Records?

Mira Clark introduces a book about cutting-edge apps and their making-by-design approach. We're all familiar with the end-product as a solution or an app: the finished product on your desk or phone. This is the part that we care about the most as a software developer. But what about what we develop in-between? In this book, you'll see that some of the most innovative and promising solutions — including maps, game apps, and apps for mobile devices — didn't start out as a product but rather as a design concept. They didn't begin with specific features or capabilities, but with visions, assumptions, and a belief in a particular user need. The designers set out to create a meaningful experience and create a solution that would really help the user or solve a problem. In turn, they created meaningful, valuable, and elegant products that people use every day. But what's in it for the software developer? As a developer, you need to start with your audience. If you want to build something that will make a difference, you need to know what people need and what they are looking for. A problem or a pain point that they want to solve or a desire that they have. Designing to meet the real needs of your user is a sure way to build a better solution. In this book, you'll learn how to become a designer with this approach. You'll gain knowledge of the mindsets and processes that allow designers to create products that are relevant and useful, and you'll learn how to bridge the gap between users and software developers. You'll learn how to help your users achieve their goals and solve their problems. As you read through this book, you'll discover how to: - Break down the process of designing a new product from scratch to ideation, conceptualization, prototyping, and the end-product - Identify user problems and needs and gain a better understanding of their scope and context - Create an understanding of the human experience and user expectations - Understand user needs and wants and the best ways to meet them - Learn how to ideate new concepts and ideas - Design and build beautiful, usable, and thoughtful experiences - Discover what it means to design with empathy and where it fits in the design process - Use research to help shape the product - Create and lead a design team of stakeholders - Learn the best tools for UX design and iterate to get to the best solution - Design with user research, including card sorting and rapid prototyping - Build a product that people want and that will be useful to them - Understand what it means to "design for the user" and meet their needs For more details check the
